Before I discuss the natural treatment regarding hemorrhoids, let me first give a brief history about the medical and surgical treatment for hemorrhoids. Medical therapy contains reducing pressure by treating the constipation and minimizing pain with the application of temperature and astringent lotions. In the surgical excision of the dilated vein, the vein is excised and the area is either left open to cure by granulation or sutured closed. Another, which is injection of a sclerosing substance into the tissues at the base of the vein may be only temporarily effective. In a nutshell, medical and surgical treatments for hemorrhoids give prolonged side effects and complications, and could produce only temporary results.

Compare, natural treatment options for hemorrhoids include using a hemorrhoid cushion, which is a donut-shaped cushion made of foam or plastic that relieves pain by allowing unwanted weight to be uniformly distributed far from the affected area; creating a hot sitz bath for 10 minutes several times a day; inserting an ice pack wrapped in a towel over the afflicted area; applying vinegar or even aloe vera carbamide peroxide gel directly to the affected area; wearing loose-fitting underwear or pants; and using the squatting position regarding bowel movements.
