The major well known underlying factor behind hemorrhoids is constipation. A normal well functioning alimentary system ought to ensure that we move our own bowels at least once every day or at the most every two days. In case your frequency of bowels is actually less than this then you are suffering from some degree of constipation.

Constipation is brought on by build up of hard feces in the intestines making the feces hard to pass. These hard stools gradually build up in the colon. Any time you feel pressed and you go to the toilet to pass out these hard stools you have to strain hard to push them out, this particular excessive straining causes extra pressure to be generated which can be then transmitted into the veins of the rectum and anus leading to the expansion of these veins.

This abnormal expansion makes the veins in order to swell up and become inflamed thus leading to the onset of hemroid symptoms. (To learn 9 sure fire ways to maintain proper alimentary system click here)
